MODULAR BUILDINGS CASE STUDY

BUCKSBURN ACADEMY, ABERDEEN

Bucksburn Academy needed a rapid expansion without the delays and site disruption associated with traditional construction. TEXO listened to the Academy's requirements and proposed a two-storey modular extension adjacent to the main Academy building. The extension was completed with IT and alarm systems linked through to the existing building.

The expansion provided eight additional classrooms, new toilet facilities, a staff room, and storage space, all delivered within a tight timeframe to avoid impacting the school curriculum. TEXO Workspace Solutions and key contractors transformed an under-utilised area into fully functional classrooms, ensuring a safe and clean learning environment. Completed on time and within budget, this project enabled the academy to continue its academic services to the local community.

Modular buildings are not 'temporary' any more," says Richard Lamb, MD at TEXO Workspace Solutions.

"Our buildings are robust, comfortable, safe and can be equipped for any use – from a school gym to a fully-kitted out classroom. We're able to build entire school premises from scratch, without the huge expense and long timescales often associated with large or complex construction projects."

INSPIRING THE NEXT GENERATION: STEM EVENT SPARKS INNOVATION

Alan Conway and Steven Cowan recently had the pleasure of inspiring the next generation of engineers at a STEM event hosted at the Energy Central Campus in Blyth. The event welcomed a remarkable group of students from St Cuthbert's School, who displayed incredible dedication by cycling all the way from North Shields in Newcastle to Blyth.

During the session, TEXO proudly showcased its cutting-edge innovations in the renewable energy sector, highlighting both current and future projects. The students were particularly captivated by demonstrations of drone technology, tidal turbine systems, and subsea vehicles. The enthusiasm and curiosity from both the pupils and their teachers made for a truly memorable and engaging experience.

The impact of the event extended far beyond the day itself. Inspired by TEXO's presentation, the students, already participants in a LEGO Engineering competition, completely reimagined their project. They ingeniously incorporated elements of TEXO's technology to create "The Turtle," an underwater robot powered by tidal and wave energy, designed for ocean litter cleanup and supported by autonomous drone technology for pollution identification. The judges were thoroughly impressed by their innovative concept, which ultimately earned them second place in the competition, an outstanding achievement against teams of students up to six years their senior!

The inspiring connection didn't end there. TEXO was deeply touched to receive twenty handwritten letters from the students, each filled with expressions of inspiration and aspirations to become future engineers and apprentices. Responding to each letter with pride, Alan Conway and Paul Cottiss from Blyth Energy Central Campus later visited the students at their school in North Shields. They were warmly welcomed by the class, who proudly presented their LEGO engineering projects and their well-deserved trophy. Sharing their design processes, these bright young minds offered a glimpse into the future of engineering.

TEXO remains committed to supporting the communities surrounding our sites. Through initiatives like this STEM event, we aim to ignite a passion for engineering and innovation in the next generation, demonstrating the exciting possibilities that lie ahead.
